Doherty plunges headlong into the Maelstrom

Stan Trybulski's new hardboiled mystery is this Spring's great read

New York City-- "Lovers of glossy, sophisticated thrillers will immediately be hooked by the third in the Doherty series...Trybulski's bright style and underlying humor are an enjoyable read, especially for those who enjoy foodie chat with a heaping helping of guns and explosives...Sure to earn a place on the shelves of crime buffs." Kirkus Discoveries.

One-Trick Pony continues the exploits of Doherty, the hard-bitten former Brooklyn prosecutor now languishing as an attorney for the New York City Department of Education. His former boss, Brooklyn D.A. turned federal judge Cynthia Milligan, approaches Doherty and offers him a deal he can't refuse: The largest pay day he ever dreamed of and a ticket to any top law firm he wants. But there is a violent and bloody catch. Milligan's daughter, a Columbia College student, was studying in Paris when she was recently kidnapped. The wealthy and powerful Milligan, about to be nominated to the Supreme Court and publicity shy, wants the girl back with no muss and no fuss. Doherty flies to Paris to look for the missing girl and quickly finds himself caught in the sights of an unknown group of killers. Calling in the aid of his shadowy Army pal Hank Jackson, the wise-cracking pair clash with a mysterious terrorist cell, and they soon realize nothing is what it seems. And as the chase carries them from Paris to the narrow streets of Marseille to the vineyards of Bordeaux, the bodies pile up and it isn't long before Doherty questions whether it is all worth it. And when the trail finally ends up in Berlin during the championship match of the World Cup soccer tournament, Doherty and Hank learn that the kidnapping is only part of a much more monstrous plot to plunge Europe into political chaos and to lay the blame on the United States. A plot they may not be able to stop.

About the Author

Stan Trybulski, the author of One-Trick Pony, is a graduate of Columbia University and Brooklyn Law School. He was a felony trial prosecutor for the district attorney's office in Brooklyn before deciding on a fiction writing career. Prior to becoming an attorney, Trybulski was a newspaper reporter, college administrator and bartender, as well as engaging in other interesting and exciting activities. His prior novels, The Gendarme, The Ides of June, and Forty-Deuce have been well received. A native New Yorker, he has traveled the world extensively and now devotes his time between France and two acres of Connecticut tranquility. His next novel, Case Maker, the fourth in the popular Doherty series, will be published later this year and his short stories will be appearing in upcoming editions of the Sherlock Holmes Mystery Magazine and Hardboiled Magazine.

The Kirkus Review Discoveries: In Forty Deuce "Trybulski weaves a tight plot. The good guys go all out to stop evildoing and the evildoers set themselves up for a dramatic fall....Doherty is a "street savvy lawyer who roughs up a pimp on the Deuce, dusts off his Johnston & Murphy's and drives his Porsche Boxster to his manse in Connecticut, where he stretches out with his three cats and a venerable French wine."

Hardboiled Magazine: "In the Ides of June Doherty, a lawyer who works for the New York City Department of Education, gets caught up in a 30 year old cold case with plenty of dark pathways and intricate curves to keep you interested in this very readable New York murder mystery. I particularly liked the sense of humor in the writing and the interplay between Doherty and his buddy, Hank. Good stuff!"
